Flint

Hi there,

I'm Sohan, the co-founder and CEO of Flint.

Flint is evolving, and we wanted you to hear it from us first.

Don't worry, Flint as you know and love it isn't going anywhere!

For a few years now, it's become increasingly clear that if we'd like to build Flint into more than just another edtech tool, it has to be a larger part of the teaching and learning experience.

The piece of software currently at the center of that is the LMS. As we've continued to develop Flint and are seeing firsthand just how fast AI models are accelerating, we're publicly embracing a bold view:

> The LMS as it stands today is an antiquated piece of software that is holding schools back, and adding more edtech tools on top won't change that reality.

It's now possible to build something new — what we're coining as an Agentic LMS — that can serve as a common instructional layer between administrators, teachers, and students. One that removes the need for a traditional LMS and a plethora of other add-on tools, all while saving time and surfacing data on the process of learning — something that software has traditionally come short on.

We'll be updating our website to reflect this framing on Monday. There'll be no degradations to your Flint experience. Instead, as we upgrade Flint over the coming weeks and months to meet this larger ambition, you can choose to use Flint as your LMS, or continue using it as-is.

We're embarking on this direction, in part, because schools have been increasingly reaching out to tell us that they're not satisfied with their current LMS, and want to use Flint in that capacity.

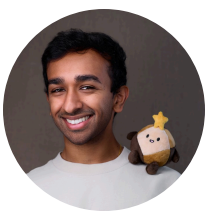

If that feels relevant to you, I'd love to talk. And, if it makes sense for your school, we've got slots open for pilots (many of which are kicking off next semester) for schools that would like to co-design with us.

Your school's rep (either Jacob or Teddy) will be in touch with more details.

Thank you for your continued partnership and trust in us — we're excited to navigate the future together!

Best,
